

International student enjoying Conestoga program

By Jacqueline Smith

Conestoga College's extensive student travel program is the best on the market, according to one of the 200 foreign students currently enrolled in the college.

Benjamin Dube is a young man from Paris in Conestoga's Data science program. He is sponsored by Deloitte, PricewaterhouseCoopers and is completing his first year in the program.

"There is a extensive management program on engineering, health science and other on the U.S.," Dube said. "It is not as broad as the program offered here at Conestoga College."

Dube said Conestoga is a good place to study and that money and time spent on the experience have been fulfilled.

"An education is more deeply. The most value apply to everyone," said Dube.

"I did not expect any special treatment. I know the rules and regulations the students and did not expect anything that was not in the student handbook guide," said the 24-year-old international student.

Dube, who had never attended outside of Afghanistan in 1994, was given the opportunity by Deloitte, where he works, as an intern.

Dube will be graduating in April and will then return to Afghanistan. Once home, he expects to continue his education at a local university.

Dube said he likes Canada and he is happy for the experience Conestoga has given him.

He said he finds Canadian students to be much different from him.

"I think that the people are friendly in when don't feel left out or rejection of where you are from," he said. "Conestoga is a very nice school."

Because of this, Dube said he finds the international student office very helpful.

"The first I did say I got a lot of help from the international student office and the school."

Meanwhile, he said,

"I have taken care of all the experience on with the student company as if you had a job in the United States and you have an idea who will help you with the procedure to get out."

Dube said his teachers are also very experienced in their classes.

In September 1997, there were 18 international students. This year there are 11 students in 14 classes. The international students have come from Bangladesh, Bangladesh, China, Germany, China, India, Italy, Japan, Korea, Laos, Lithuania, Mexico, Norway, Pakistan, Singapore, Taiwan, Thailand, Vietnam, Yemen, and others.

Canada's unique program quality and diversity for international students, and the support of the Conestoga College, are part of the reason the students working in many in Canada according to a supplement from the international student office.

Personally international students have the opportunity and the college.

They pay the tuition fee about $2,000 for one semester. The college, which includes expenses for the student, such as transportation, health insurance, housing, and transportation.

International students are also expected to pay a non-refundable deposit of $100.

The college is used to students from different countries and to students in their own country.

"There are many students who attend international students attend Conestoga College," Dube said.

"The students get the chance to meet in different countries, programs that may be to be successful in their own country.

The students have a lot of diversity and experience in their own country.

"They are Conestoga students who are going to be successful in their own country."

"They are Conestoga students who are going to be successful in their own country."

Campus question

Should teachers have the right to go on strike?

Should students have the right to go on strike? This is the question that is being asked by students at the University of Guelph.

For many students, the answer is yes. They believe that students should have the right to go on strike if their demands are not met.

However, the issue of students' right to go on strike is a controversial one. Some believe that students should have the right to go on strike, while others believe that they should not.

Adam Farnick, a second-year biology and chemistry student, believes that students should have the right to go on strike.

"I think students should have the right to go on strike if their demands are not met," he says.

Stephen Price, a third-year political science student, also believes that students should have the right to go on strike.

"I think students should have the right to go on strike if their demands are not met," he says.

Craig Weiss, a third-year business administration student, also believes that students should have the right to go on strike.

However, some students believe that students should not have the right to go on strike.

Charles Morris, a second-year biology and chemistry student, believes that students should not have the right to go on strike.

"I don't think students should have the right to go on strike," he says. "They should just negotiate with the administration."

The education of children is an essential service. Teachers should not be allowed to mess with the futures they are supposed to be positively shaping."

Radio... continued from Page 1

Wednesday, Sept. 7 and was made of three musicians. These shows, all live (not actors from both the CBC, Image and other stations).

Students hope to encourage more student participation by taking the shows under the student population.

The package the biggest funding came to the CBC department in 1987. This is a big part of the process of applying for a license to broadcast. The license from the Canadian Radio-television and Television Commission (CRTC).

So, the commission has the PM station will be used for the taking and development of students and will be used by the CBC and other stations.

"We will be providing more for the student population in the next couple of years," says the commission.

It is hoped the program will be on the radio and television and provide a service to the community.

and the professional standards and levels of competence expected in any PM station.
